Summary:

As international education professionals who have focused their careers on increasing transatlantic mobility, we are aware of the complexities and intricacies of finding the right information and funding to advance U.S. universities’ work with Europe.

European institutions can be strong partners as they are:

- High quality, research-focused, and globally ranked, thus equal partners;
- Capable of running joint programs and exchanges due to their long experience with Erasmus;
- Interested in fueling mobility through exchanges, including at the graduate, doctoral, and levels;
- Able to tap into funding opportunities for both individuals and institutions;
- Supported by their national governments, research agencies, and European-level bodies in actively advancing collaboration with U.S. universities.

Below is a non-exhaustive list of information and funding resources to aid you in your pursuit of U.S.-European university cooperation. If we may be of assistance to you, please reach out to christopher.medalis@gmail.com.
